ALL TERMS IN CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN ENGLISH WHICH PERTAIN TO ASPECTS OF HUMAN BEHAVIOR OR PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS WERE ASSEMBLED FROM AVAILABLE LEXICONS. THESE TERMS WERE CATEGORIZED INTO 15 RUBRICS ON THE BASIS OF JUDGMENTS OF THEIR FAMILIARITY, SPECIFICITY, AND CERTAIN BROAD SEMANTIC CRITERIA. SOME 2,800 TERMS WERE IDENTIFIED WHICH SEEMINGLY REFERRED TO RELATIVELY STABLE AND SPECIFIC "BIOPHYSICAL" TRAITS OF INDIVIDUALS. THESE WORDS WERE PRESENTED TO GROUPS OF UNIVERSITY UNDERGRADUATES TO DETERMINE FAMILIARITY LEVELS, SPECIFICITY OF CONNOTATIVE MEANING, AND A VARIETY OF PSYCHOMETRIC OPERATING CHARACTERISTICS (E.G., ENDORSEMENT RATES FOR SELF AND FOR OTHERS, DESIRABILITY, ETC.). RESULTS OF THE ANALYSIS OF THESE DATA ARE PRESENTED AND SOME OF THEIR POTENTIAL USES FOR TEST DEVELOPMENT AND PERSONALITY DESCRIPTION ARE SUGGESTED. ADDITIONAL ANALYSES CURRENTLY IN PROGRESS DIRECTED TOWARD FURTHER REFINEMENT OF THE SET AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF A STRUCTURED TAXONOMY BASED ON THESE DESCRIPTORS ARE BRIEFLY OUTLINED. (AUTHOR)

Abstract

All terms in contemporary American English which pertain to aspects of human behavior or personal characteristics were assembled from available lexicons. These terms were categorized into 15 rubrics on the basis of judgments of their familiarity, specificity, and certain broad semantic criteria. Some 2,800 terms were identified which seemingly referred to relatively stable and specific "biophysical" traits of individuals. These words were presented to groups of university undergraduates to determine familiarity levels, specificity of connotative meaning, and a variety of psychometric operating characteristics (e.g., endorsement rates for self and for others, desirability, etc.). Results of the analysis of these data are presented and some of their potential uses for test development and personality description are suggested. Additional analyses currently in progress directed toward further refinement of the set and the development of a structured taxonomy based on these descriptors are briefly outlined.

2800 PERSONALITY TRAIT DESCRIPTORS: NORMATIVE OPERATING CHARACTERISTICS FOR A UNIVERSITY POPULATION[1]

This report summarizes some preliminary work carried out on a project whose ultimate aim is the development of a well-structured taxonomy of personality descriptive terms. The motivations for this effort are the needs that exist in theoretical and applied research contexts for a means of describing persons in terms of their characteristic traits, dispositions or styles of behavior; for obtaining assessments of such attributes to whatever degree of precision and specificity is required; and for providing mechanisms for communicating such information in a precise and unambiguous form. The basic commitment which underlies this research effort is that the eventual construction of more effective theories of the development, structure, and functioning of personality and the formulation of more adequate procedures for the selection, classification, and evaluation of personnel will be facilitated by having available a well-organized, and extensive vocabulary by means of which to denote phenotypic attributes of persons. It is also assumed that the eventual development of psychometrically adequate methods and devices for the assessment of personality characteristics will be markedly aided by the availability of a comprehensive and clearly articulated taxonomy of trait descriptive terms.

This taxonomy is to be sufficiently exhaustive, precise, and well-structured to be useful for purposes of scientific communication and assessment. The senses in which the terms "exhaustive," "precise," and "well-structured" are here used deserve some additional comment. This attempt to construct a taxonomy of personality characteristics is to be exhaustive in the sense that it takes as its fundamental data base the set of all perceptible variations in performance and appearance between persons or within individuals over time and varying situations that are of sufficient social significance, of sufficiently widespread occurrence, and of sufficient distinctiveness to have been encoded and retained as a subset of descriptive predicates in the natural language during the course of its development, growth, and refinement.

The taxonomy is to be precise in two senses. First, terms are to be excluded whose meanings are grossly vague or ambiguous; whether by virtue of the existence of well-known but distinct and alternative usages for a given orthographic form, because the meaning derives from some obscure and generally unknown historical, literary or dialectic source, or because the term refers to a compound or broad composite of more primary and separately distinguishable attributes. And secondly, precision is to be sought by organizing the terms retained into subsets narrowly defined by a conjunction of criteria including judged similarity of meaning and such empirical operating characteristics of the terms as their rated desirabilities, endorsement probabilities, difficulty level, etc. as determined (eventually) on a variety of subpopulations.

Finally, the taxonomy is to be well-structured not just in the sense implied by the groupings mentioned above, but also in the sense that relations between groups of terms are to be determined. It seems likely that several alternative structurings based on different sets of criteria and, perhaps, different kinds of relational calculi may ultimately be required. However, whatever the form and complexity, the taxonomy is to be eventually organized or articulated rather than left as a mere collection of distinct subsets of functionally synonymous descriptors.

Procedures

The sequence of procedures that we have employed during the initial part of the research program is briefly outlined below.

Phase 1: Construction of the Master Pool. The initial pool of terms considered was the set of 17,954 "Trait-Names" drawn from the 1925 unabridged edition of Webster's New International Dictionary, and listed by Allport and Odbert (1936). Each term in this list together with a code number was punched into (and printed on) a separate IBM card for subsequent handling. In addition the entire contents of Webster's Third New International Dictionary, Unabridged (1961) was scanned and all terms which pertained in any manner to attributes of persons or their behavior but which were not included in the Allport-Odbert list were recorded. In the course of this effort notations were made of all terms listed by Allport and Odbert which have been dropped from the Third International and any relevant grammatical, prefixal, or suffixal forms of terms not included in the Allport-Odbert pool were also added.[2]

By rough estimate it appears that the total pool comprising both the total Allport-Odbert list and all potential additions from Webster's Third numbers nearly 40,000 terms or roughly 10% of the total number of entries in the latter source. A systematic search for additional terms (e.g., from compendia of slang or from technical jargons) has been deferred at this point, and possibly indefinitely, both because of the low likelihood of uncovering additional useful terms and because of the more pressing need to begin simplifying and imposing some order on the materials available from the sources already mentioned.

Phase 2: Initial Culling of the Master Pool. While it is not possible in general to draw hard and fast distinctions between classes of terms which are vague or ambiguous in their semantic reference and those that are not, still the differences in degree of openness of meaning that do exist did provide a basis for an initial, gross refinement of the pool on judgmental grounds.

For instance, a rather large number of terms in the Allport-Odbert list (as well as many potential additions from Webster's Third) are quite clearly so seldom used in contemporary discourse, pertain to such obscure literary, historical, or mythological referents, or derive from such archaic or little known dialects, that to include them as descriptive predicates in a contemporary scientific vocabulary would make such a compendium virtually useless for its intended purposes.

In the second place, many terms (including more than a few of those just alluded to) refer to such broad and loosely related classes of attributes or behaviors or entail the use of such extended and nebulous metaphors and analogies to make their relevance to personal characteristics at all clear, that they are also best excluded from further consideration at the outset.

Third, there exists a large class of terms which denote variously anatomical or physiognomic characteristics, medical or physiological symptoms, merely physical aspects of behavior, movements, or location, or of appearance, grooming, and dress. While some of these attributes might conceivably have important implications for personality development and functioning, the implications would ordinarily be indirect and so highly contingent upon historical and current situational conditions that such relations were judged to be best left as matters for subsequent experimental study.

Fourth, and finally, the natural language (at least, contemporary American English) is loaded with terms whose connotations are either purely evaluative (honorific or pejorative) or which are merely quantifiers of degree or amount for whatever substantive term they are coupled with. Such terms convey almost exclusively some degree of social or personal approval or disapproval; that is, without any indications as to what attributes or characteristics of the person the valuation accrues. There is no implication here that other terms are value-neutral; only that whatever the evaluative loadings or valences of these remaining terms may be, they also have connotations that refer to specific attributes or traits of the person.

These four bases for excluding terms were applied initially to the terms in the Allport-Odbert list. To qualify for exclusion on one or another of these bases, a term had to be initially so-categorized by one member of the research staff and subsequently agreed to by at least two of the three others. Doubtful terms or those for which disagreements could not be resolved were retained for further consideration.

Phase 3: Gross Categorizing of Retained Terms. This phase of the research actually proceeded concurrently with Phase 2. The effort here was to sort those terms not excluded on one of another of the bases described above into one of three major rubrics and then into one of three or four subcategories under each major class. The specifications for these subcategories together with those for the four exclusion categories described in the last section are given together with examples of terms placed in each in Table 1.

As adjuncts to the subjective judgments on which this categorization of the terms mainly rests, Thorndike-Lorge word counts and definitions as given in Webster's Third were used to resolve disagreements and as guides to the classifying of doubtful terms. In all cases for which any reasonable doubt existed as to whether the term should be placed in one of the exclusion categories (12-15), it was not, but rather was retained in one of the other categories pending the accumulation of data on its operating characteristics in subsequent phases of the research.

Phase 4: Operating Characteristics of Terms from Categories 1, 2, and 3. Some 2800 terms from the Allport-Odbert and supplementary lists were found suitable for inclusion in one or another of the first three categories. (Some additional 786 terms initially placed in either category 2 or category 3 were deleted from further consideration at this point for various reasons--e.g., the existence of a preferable form or forms of the word in the list; excessive "slangyness," awkwardness, or stiltedness; unsuitability for presentation in a printed format in a group testing situation, etc.)[3] The remaining 2800 terms which had been judged to reflect stable, "biophysical"

Category 9, N = 163	Prime Terms for Social Effects or "Social Stimulus Values"	Alluring	Impressive
		Bothersome	Lovable
.90%		Captivating	Maddening
	Terms designating particular effects a person has on another person, group, or institution.	Dangerous	Nuisance
		Endurable	Oppressive
		Flustering	Pathetic
	Terms denoting the social stimulus value of a person from the viewpoint of the other person or group.	Grueling	Repugnant
		Humorous	Stunning
Category 10, N = 163	Moderately Difficult Terms for Social Roles and Effects	Affluent	Impregnable
		Bawd	Lesbian
.90%		Charlatan	Minion
	Terms relevant and descriptive of social roles, relationships, or status or which connote specific effects or social stimulus values from the other's viewpoint but whose meaning would be known only by fairly sophisticated and knowledgeable persons.	Droll	Novice
		Enigmatic	Ostracized

traits were then divided into 14 lists of 200 terms each. Appendix O contains an alphabetical list of all 2800 terms together with a pair of numbers indicating the category into which the term was initially sorted (CAT=1, 2, or 3), and the set or form in which the term was placed for purposes of data collection (FORM=1, 2, 3, . . ., or 14).

Each list was administered to a different sample of 50 male and 50 female undergraduate students under each of several conditions. First, subjects were asked to give a synonym or short definition for each term presented or, alternatively, to cross out the word if they had no idea as to its meaning. These data are currently being coded to determine the difficulty level, the degree of ambiguity or vagueness, and the functional synonyms of each term. Second, subjects were asked to rate the degree to which each term presented was applicable to, or descriptive of, self (S) and each of three self-selected peers--one of whom he liked (A), one to whom he was indifferent (B), and one of whom he disliked (C). Third, and finally, subjects were asked to rate the degree of social desirability possessed by each trait presented.

Results

Summary itemetric analyses of the data from the second and third tasks (Describing People and Word Ratings) have been carried out and are reported in Appendices 1 through 14 of this report. These analyses were done on the subsamples of males and females separately as well as on the combined sample for each of the 14 sets of terms. A number of the itemetric indices showed sufficiently large differences between the male and female subsamples to warrant presentation of their results separately. Sufficient information is presented, however (i.e., subsample frequencies, means, standard deviations, and correlations), to estimate the various itemetric coefficients for the full samples for those desiring to do so.

In Appendices 1 through 14 the itemetric analyses for the males are given on the left side of the page and those for the females on the right. The "Item No." which precedes each term is simply a serial file number but does indicate by its first digit the source from which the term was drawn. The initial digits 1, 2, 3 and 4 refer to the respective columns of the Allport-Odbert list and the digit 5 indicates the term was added from Webster's Third.

The row and column headings for the matrices on the left denote the five "tasks" under which the data were collected. The label "10-WR" denotes the desirability rating data with larger numbers indicating "desirable" ratings and lower values indicating "undesirable" ratings on a scale that runs from 1 to 9 at the extremes. The labels DP-S, DP-A, DP-B, and DP-C refer to ratings of "self" and the three "others" described above on a scale that runs from 0 to 2 where:

"0" = the word is not a good or accurate description of this person

"1" = the word is only partly or occasionally descriptive of this person

"2" = the word is a particularly good or accurate description of this person

The coefficients in the lower triangle of the matrix are product-moment correlations between the respective pairs of tasks and are based in each instance on all cases in the sample that gave numerical ratings (rather than a "cross-out") under both task conditions. The number of persons on which each correlation is based is given by the frequency number that appears in the symmetric position above the main diagonal in these matrices.

The three columns to the right of each matrix labeled "N", "MEAN", and "S.D." give, respectively, the number of persons in the sample giving numerical ratings on each task, and the mean and standard deviation of these ratings based on these respondents (i.e., excluding those who crossed out the term as being unknown to them).

Discussion

It was mentioned above that where any substantial doubt existed concerning the potential usefulness of a descriptive term, it was retained in a category for which itemetric data were to be collected. A glance at the list in Appendix O reveals how unrestrictive the application of this rule was in the sorting of terms into Categories 1, 2, and 3. By virtually any criterion this set of 2800 terms contains many terms whose familiarity, currency, and/or specificity of meaning are doubtful. But since a priori judgments on these matters differed, we deemed it preferable to be overly inclusive rather than exclusive in retaining terms until data concerning actual usage characteristics were available.

The data presented in Appendices 1 through 14 now provide bases for culling this list further. For example, if a sizable fraction of bright, literate, university undergraduates is unfamiliar with a given term it seems unlikely the term would have much utility as an item on a rating scale or inventory intended for use in the general population or with less verbally sophisticated subgroups in the general population.

A tally of the "cross-outs" under the self-descriptive task (DP-S) indicates that about 34.5% of all words were rated by all 100 respondents. An additional 12.9% were rated by all except one respondent, 7.1% by all but two subjects, 5.1% by all except 3, 3.1% by all except 4, etc. Thus 1755 of the 2800 terms (62.7%) were rated as variously self-descriptive by 96% or more of the respondents who were presented the term, 2007 of the 2800 (71.7%) by 91% or more, and 2161 of the 2800 (77.2%) by 86% or more of the respondents. Approximately 15.2% of the terms (426 of 2800) were responded to by fewer than 75% of the subjects.

There was some variation among subsets of terms in these response rates. In particular, the response rates for terms in subsets 1 through 5 were generally lower than for terms from subsets 6 through 10 and these latter in turn were generally lower than were those from the remaining subsets, 11-14. This was not altogether unexpected since the data collection was done in three phases (corresponding to the subsets mentioned above) and the selection of terms to include in the later subsets benefitted from experience gained in the earlier testing. It should be emphasized that the subjects for all three waves of data collection were recruited from the same general population of university undergraduates and that instructions and administrative procedures were, in all essential features, the same for all three phases of data collection.

It was mentioned above that synonyms or definitions of each term were also obtained. These data, when coded, will provide an additional basis for refining the pool by identifying terms whose connotations are not clearly understood or for which a diversity of meanings are held despite their having relatively low "cross-out" rates. Once such terms are deleted the remaining items will then be subjected to a variety of structural analyses. That is, relationships among items will be estimated from the data obtained under the several tasks and the terms remaining within each subset will be grouped into homogeneous subsets on the basis of these results. Preliminary efforts along this line have been begun and will be reported at a later date.

Finally, it should be pointed out that these data provide a means for exploring a variety of questions of current interest in the area of personality assessment. As one example, they have already been used to provide an empirical test of a reformulation of the question of the relationship of social desirability to self-reports of personality attributes (Norman, in press). Other issues, e.g., the relationship of perceived attributes of others to those of self, sex differences in perceived personality attributes and their relationships, etc., are also subject to investigation using these data.

Once the pool of terms has been culled to eliminate those unsuitable for precise and unambiguous description and a tentative structuring of these predicates has been achieved, then a variety of investigations of both psychometric and substantive psychological relevance can be undertaken with some assurance that matters of domain definition and itemetric characteristics of the test stimuli are well-established and understood. It is in the spirit of providing a partial basis for such future investigations that the present study was undertaken and that these data are here reported.

1. Portions of this paper were presented at meetings of the American Psychological Association in New York, September, 1966. The research reported was carried out under the auspices of USPHS Research Grant MH-07195.

2. Whatever shortcomings Webster's Third may have as a standard of "proper" and historical English, the philosophy that guided this remarkably sweeping revision and modernization of the earlier edition could hardly have been more ideally suited to our purposes nor could this work have been released at a more opportune time.

3. In addition, 3 terms (ALTERCATIVE, CONVENTIONAL, and RUFFIAN) were inadvertently included twice in the set of 2800 due to a clerical error. Thus data on only 2797 different terms are presented in this report.
